Holiday Message

Greetings:

Christmas Eve was always a busy day for the Lucey family. Our general store would have the biggest day of the year; the house was filled with the smell of fresh pies and cakes. Weary from our day, we gathered in late evening about the Christmas tree in the living room. As the youngest in the family, it was my task to pass out the gifts. These are my fondest memories, but now they are just memories. All the gifts are gone-outgrown or worn out. In a sense all that I have left is me, what I am, what I have become through the love and trust, care and concern expressed in all those gifts and memories. I am a gift — not without limitation and weakness — but given and good. I can love and be loved, trust and be trusted, care and be cared for.

This Christmas I am going to take the time to reflect with gratitude to God and man for what I am: a gift. Confident of my worth and goodness I can look with hope at the great challenges that I face with my colleagues at Campion and my fellowman in this world. If we can realize our own goodness, our own "giftness," we can relax our defenses and appreciate the richness of each other.

May your Christmas be truly happy because you have taken the time to be with yourself and those you love. The newborn life of the world was found in a humble family setting. May you find Him in your family.

Merry Christmas,

Gregory F. Lucey, S.J.

Knights Make TV Debut

The Campion Knights made their television debut Friday, December 4. Mr. Jerry McCarthy and several members of his biology class appeared on KDUB-TV, channel 40 in Dubuque, Iowa.

An interview and discussion about the hydrobiology seminar was the highlight. Campion has perhaps the only floating classroom on the upper Mississippi.

Dr. Pino Speaks To Campion Faculty

A nationally known educator and lecturer, Dr. Edward Pino, conducted a workshop at Campion Wednesday, Nov. 18. Faculty members attended group sessions Wednesday morning followed by a general assembly in the afternoon.

Dr. Pino received his doctorate in education from Stanford University. He has done innovative work in team-teaching, non-grading, multi-age grouping and open space planning. He has taught on every level and has served at all levels in elementary and secondary education. During the past summer he was the main lecturer during a two week institute on creative education at Edgewood College, Madison, Wis.

Dr. Pino is currently superintendent of Cherry Creek Schools in Metropolitan Denver. He is also a member on President Nixon's Commission on Drug Education.

Bio — Research Sponsors Campion Student In Projects

Miami — Chicago — New Orleans — Indianapolis — Cleveland — South Bend. These were just some of the research sites for twenty-one enterprising Campion students last Spring.

Sound like a lark? Not quite! Following scientific methods in areas of their own interest, each of these students designed an independent investigation into an unknown, and submitted their proposals to a faculty committee which administers Campion's Science-Math Small Grants Program.

The program is financed entirely by Bio-Research Associates, Incorporated, the Milwaukee firm conducting Campion's dental health study now in its third year. President of the company, Dr. Charles J. Wilson, awarded the $5000 gift to Campion's science and mathematics departments to provide a means for those students with purposeful research designs and objectives to perform independent study. Dr. Wilson's dental research on campus is designed to measure the effectiveness of a phosphate additive in breakfast food for the prevention of cavities.

Of the fortunate grant recipients, thirteen traveled to relatively distant parts of the country. For six weeks during the second semester, Mark Rowley and Marty Schultz studied marine biology under supervision of the U.S. Department of the Interior's Bureau of Commercial Fisheries in Miami, Florida. Parts of Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, and Wisconsin provided the scenic resources for Bob Elliott and Tom Riordan as they filmed — for the school library — the ecological conflict between man and nature. Bob Dietz chaired a committee which toured Chicago's Museum of Science and Industry, and Argonne National Laboratories. Under the direct guidance of Loyola University's Department of Human Relations, Mike Keane and Mark Sloan studied the economy and culture of black Americans in sections of New Orleans.

Apart from research requiring travel, eight students performed independent laboratory investigations on campus, under faculty supervision. Pat Casey studied the effects of sulphur dioxide on the lungs of mice, while Mark Ewald, Bill Sheehan, and Kevin Havlik examined the anatomy of mink through dissection. Bill Murray and Jerry Mueller investigated the effect of chloramphenicol on rabbits' blood, and John Larson investigated the effects of commercial detergents and fuel oil on the life of the tadpole. Attempting the highly sophisticated heart transplant, Eugene Brooks experimented with two large, African bullfrogs. And Mike Luke observed the spread and concentration of radiation in the internal organs of a frog which had digested a radioactive worm.

Campion; An Option

Editors Note: During the past few months, Father Lucey has presented his thoughts on Campion at numerous receptions for parents, alumni and prospective parents. The response to his talks has been so positive and enthusiastic I have asked him to summarize his presentation. This is his message.

Thanks to each of you for coming out tonight; a special thanks to those of you who made this reception possible. I see the purpose of these receptions as twofold. They provide an opportunity to renew friendships with alumni and past parents and to confer with present parents in this area. Secondly, they give me a chance to present Campion as an option to those of you confronted with the decision of selecting a school for your sons.

This decision cannot be taken lightly; it is of extreme importance. You are deciding the educational environment your son will experience for the next four years. This decision is important both because these are the critically formative years for him and because your son is growing up at a time when our society is in flux. Man's knowledge has more than doubled in his lifetime; the only consistency in society is the increasing rapidity of change; no value or belief is beyond the questioning mind of our day.

You do have an option; there are alternatives. Because of the sacrifice of our parents and grandparents, we have inherited the freedom of education. You can view the local schools, public and parochial, and visit private schools before selecting the best learning environment for your son. You enjoy a real freedom of education, a freedom which underlies all other freedoms in our pluralistic society.

But will your son have this freedom to choose a school for his son? If present trends continue the answer is NO. Parochial education is in serious financial trouble across the land. Private secondary schools, such as Campion, have dropped 25 percent in enrollment over the last couple of years. This trend could result in one school system, a virtual monopoly which need not be sensitive nor responsive to the needs or beliefs of its clientele.

At a great price this freedom was given to us. We are the generation who will decide whether this legacy will be passed on. In making your decision on a school for your son, you will help to decide the larger question: Will there be an option when your son sends his son to high school?

I am here to offer Campion as an option. I will speak of four aspects of the school: the physical facilities, the academic program, the community dimension, and the Christian life of the Campion community.

Our ninety-acre campus, at the confluence of the Mississippi and Wisconsin Rivers, has nine major buildings. Four of these were built in the last fifteen years. The boys have semi-private rooms and excellent athletic facilities including an olympic-size pool. Few schools can compare with what we have, but the physical plant does not make the school.

The academic program at Campion is based on three principles.

Learning is the responsibility of the learner.

It is unjust to treat unequals equally.

Young people need boundaries.

Allow me to expand on each of these.

At the elementary level much of the responsibility for learning rests with the teacher and parents rather than with the child. But from your own experience you know that it is not until you began to assume the responsibility for your learning that you really began your education. As long as you jumped through the hoops at the prodding of the trainer, you learned just that; to jump through a hoop.

Therefore, a primary educational objective of Campion is the development of a sense of responsibility in the student for his own learning. A student should learn not only how to use his time and energy well so that he gets the assigned work done, but he must learn to explore new areas, raise questions, and discover possible sources for solutions. When he begins to take this responsibility he begins to learn.

This process requires freedom for the student — freedom to learn or to falter. We strive to give graduated responsibility to each student as he develops, rewarding his success and confronting his irresponsibility. In this way we hope to encourage him to assume the responsibility for his own learning.

To say it is unjust to treat unequals equally is another way of saying we must respect individual differences. This adage deserves more than lip service from educators. Each student does have unique abilities, personal interests and motivations; he has his own level of achievement in each area, his own experiences and his own learning styles; his attitudes and aptitudes are as distinctive as his handwriting or his walk. We are moving toward the point where the learning difficulties of each student will be diagnosed individually, and a personal prescription of learning experiences will be determined with his assistance. We will begin to treat unequals unequally; that is, each student as the unique individual he is.

Finally, young people need boundaries. Only with broad supportive structures can students be comfortable and productive. These boundaries must be clearly stated and consistently enforced. At Campion these boundaries affect time, location, and type of activity. Within these boundaries various degrees of freedom are allowed.

These are the three principles underlying our academic program:

Learning is the responsibility of the learner.

It is unjust to treat unequals equally.

Young people need boundaries.

But, Campion is more than an academic program, more than a school. Campion does not begin at 8:15 a.m. and end at 3:00 p.m. Campion begins in early September and continues until late May. Campion is a total life experience.

If you reflect your own experience you did not develop those convictions and beliefs that give real meaning and value to your life between 8:15 a.m. and 3:00 p.m. in a classroom. Aware of this fact, we strive to make the total environment conducive to that learning that gives meaning to life. We work to build a community.

After sputnik in 1958, the thrust in American education was towards mathematics and science; space exploration became the national priority. In 1969 we reached the moon, but we have not reached each other. We have not come to understand and appreciate our fellowman.

In a faculty-student discussion last spring, a senior was asked if he came to Campion for the academic program. "No", he said, "I could have gotten that at home. What I value from Campion most is what I have learned about people." At a reception such as this, following the presentation, a prospective parent asked one of the Campion boys present what values he had derived from Campion. He paused and said, "I have learned that I must love the fellow next door. 'Love' is a strong word for a young man to use but that is what I must say. I have learned that I must love all the guys on my wing." Recently a boy asked to accompany me to a reception. At the end of the evening I asked him to say a few words. He explained his Campion experience this way. "At Campion I have experienced what it means to live in a community. As a result I see Christ in each boy whether he is a hippie or a member of the John Birch Society. This community experience has given me profound respect for the individual. I do not know what form my life's work will take, but I know it will be a work of service for individuals."

At Campion the dormitories are broken down into wings, groups of twenty-five boys and one young Jesuit. This is the basic unit of the school. They live together, worship together, elect their representatives to the student government and organize their teams for intramurals. The young Jesuit is there to be available to them, to counsel and guide them but most of all to help them form a community within the larger Campion community.

A parent told me, "The main reason I send my boy to Campion is the daily contact he has with an intelligent, dedicated young Jesuit."

In America today we need respect for law. Not because law should be respect in itself but because respect for law is based on respect for the person. At Campion our young men come to see that laws are not arbitrary but stem from the rights of the individual. They learn to question the law and see its necessity for healthy, harmonious community living.

Flowing directly from this community dimension is the Christian life of Campion. Christianity can only exist where there is a community. God did not choose to save us as individuals but as a people, a community.

I could dwell on the excellent theology program, the daily liturgy or the availability of Christian men to question with the young men the values they struggle to accept or reject. But instead let me speak only of faith.

When a boy comes to Campion his articulation and practice of faith conforms almost perfectly to that of his parents because, in fact, he believes with their faith. Hopefully, while at Campion, a student will come to a point where he can say for himself, "I believe in Jesus Christ; I believe in the church." His articulation and his practice may not conform with that of his parents nor mine. And this makes us uneasy. But is far more important that he have faith than that his expressions of that faith conforms to ours.

I have presented Campion to you as an option in your choice of the best educational environment for your son during the four critical years he is about to begin. Be grateful you have alternatives as you work out your decision.

Thank you.

Swimming Team 2-0

After two very successful years as swimming coach, Father Larry Kerrigan has retired and Mr. Jack Garvey, S.J. '63, has taken over. Undeclared in two meets this season the Knights have a well-balanced squad. Campion won a three-school meet over Sauk Prairie and Madison La-Follette 68-59-42 and a dual meet with Sauk Prairie 69-26.

Leading the squad co-captains, Kevin Washburn and Joe Egan. Seniors, Jim Meagher and Bob McKendry, are also key men on the team. McKendry holds down top spot in diving, while Washburn, Egan, and Meagher swim the 200 IM, breast-stroke, backstroke, free-style, and butterfly. Their times are in top ten in Wisconsin already. Other swimmers are juniors, Doug Agard and Mark Waickman, in the 200 and 400 free-style; Breen Lyden and Mike McVary in the butterfly and back-stroke; and frosh, Tim Onorato, Joe Waickman and Mark Lyden.

John Schrup Leads Cagers To 6-2 Mark

Campion's basketball squad jumped off to five straight victories led by senior captain, John Schrup. Not only does Schrup lead the Knights but the CWCC as well with a 23.7 point average.

Also ranked in scoring are: junior, Jerry Simpson, at 10 points per game and freshman center, Mike White, with 7.7 average. Rounded out the starters are senior Joe Wagner and junior Glen Allen. Top reserves and sometime starters are juniors John Nillen, Tom Berg, and Tom Cain.

The average winning margin in those first five victories was 18 points, a fine accomplishment against some excellent ball teams. However, Coach Don Gosz feels his squad must play better defense as evidenced by 75-58 and 79-69 losses to Regis and McDonell. "The kids need to gain more experience to make our defense work. I am sure they will come around shortly." Coach Gosz noted he has only two seniors and relies mainly on juniors plus White, a freshman.

The Knights put the offense and defense together for a 72-58 win over Stevens Point Pacelli. This sixth win came as the team left for Christmas vacation. Schrup and Simpson led the way in the scoring column while White and Allen pulled down 29 rebounds. Defense was the key word as the Cardinals could only manage four points in the first period and 30 after three quarters.

6'7 freshman center Mike White participates in basketball squad practice.
